

Minimize the impact of RMDs

Required minimum distributions (RMDs) rules don't require you to spend the money

Whether you're ready for retirement income or not, IRS rules require that you start drawing your savings from certain types of accounts at RMD age.

In essence, the tax deferrals afforded to some retirement plans don't last forever¹. Of course, navigating these rules can get a little complicated. In fact, it can potentially be a real puzzle.

But help is available.

Redirect RMDs into new annuities tailored to help meet your evolving needs

If you aren't planning to spend your RMDs right away – and there's nothing saying you have to – you might consider redirecting the money into a product where it's able to continue growing.

An annuity from North American could be the missing puzzle piece you're looking for. With a variety of designs and minimum premiums starting at $10,000, your financial professional can custom tailor a solution to help fit your needs.

The situation

You're currently taking RMDs to satisfy obligations under the law, but you don't need the income, and you'd just as soon see it put back into another product to continue to work for you.

The term financial professional is not intended to imply engagement in an advisory business in which compensation is not related to sales. Financial professionals that are insurance licensed will be paid a commission on the sale of an insurance product.

Fixed index annuities are not a direct investment in the stock market. They are long term insurance products with guarantees backed by the issuing company. They provide the potential for interest to be credited based in part on the performance of specific indices, without the risk of loss of premium due to market downturns or fluctuation. Although fixed index annuities guarantee no loss of premium due to market downturns, deductions from your accumulation value for additional optional benefit riders could under certain scenarios exceed interest credited to the accumulation value, which would result in loss of premium. They may not be appropriate for all clients. Interest credits to a fixed index annuity will not mirror the actual performance of the relevant index. 1.
